QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

- I. WHETHER THE INDICTMENT AGAINST PETITIONERS SHOULD HAVE BEEN DISMISSED BECAUSE OF FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH APPLICABLE PROVISIONS OF THE SPEEDY TRIAL ACT, 18 UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 3161, ET. SEQ., IN THAT TRIAL OF THE CASE DID NOT COMMENCE WITHIN THE ALLOWABLE STATUTORY TIME.
- II. WHETHER A SINGLE DEFENSE ATTORNEY'S REPRESENTATION OF ALL FOUR CO-DEFENDANTS AT TRIAL, WHERE DIVERGENT DEFENSES WERE PROPOUNDED, DENIED PETITIONERS A FUNDAMENTALLY FAIR TRIAL AND THEIR RIGHT TO EFFECTIVE ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL AS GUARANTEED BY THE SIXTH AMENDMENT.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice of the United States, and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

The Petitioners, PAUL L. FERRANTE and RANDY JAMES MYERS, Appellants in the court below, respectfully pray that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit entered in the above case on March 21, 1983. That decision affirmed a judgment of conviction by a jury in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia at Atlanta on August 10, 1981.

OPINIONS BELOW ¹

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, affirming the judgment of conviction, is reported at 701 F.2d 1321 (11th Cir. 1983) and is set forth as Appendix "A". A subsequent Motion to Clarify the Record was granted to reflect that the Speedy Trial and argument in support thereof was made applicable to Petitioners Ferrante and Myers under a previous motion to adopt.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit was entered on March 21, 1983. A timely Petition for Rehearing with Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc was denied by that court on May 16, 1983. This petition for certiorari is being timely mailed for filing within sixty days of that date, pursuant to Rule 28.2 of this Court. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is invoked pursuant to 28 United States Code, Section 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

United States Constitution, Amendment VI (1791):

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defense.

United States Code Title 18.

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 44(c):

Right to and Assignment of Counsel.

(c) Joint representation. Whenever two or more defendants have been jointly charged pursuant to Rule 8(b) or have been joined for trial pursuant to Rule 13, and are represented by the same retained or assigned counsel or by retained or assigned counsel who are associated in the practice of law, the court shall promptly inquire with respect to such joint representation and shall personally advise each defendant of his right to the effective assistance of counsel, including separate representation. Unless it appears that there is good cause to believe no conflict of interest is likely to arise, the court shall take such measures as may be appropriate to protect each defendant's right to counsel.

United States Code Title 18, Chapter 208—Speedy Trial
§3161. Time limits and exclusions:

(c)(1) In any case in which a plea of not guilty is entered, the trial of a defendant charged in an information or indictment with the commission of an offense shall commence within seventy days from the filing date (and making public) of the information or indictment, or from the date the defendant has appeared before a judicial officer of the court in which such charge is pending, whichever date last occurs. If a defendant consents in writing to be tried before a magistrate on a complaint, the trial shall commence within seventy days from the date of such consent.

(h) The following period of delay resulting from other proceedings concerning the defendant, including but not limited to—

(1) Any period of delay resulting from other proceedings concerning the defendant, including but not limited to —

* * *

(F) delay resulting from any pretrial motion, from the filing of the motion through the conclusion of the hearing on, or other prompt disposition of, such motion;

* * *

(J) delay reasonably attributable to any period, not to exceed thirty days, during which any proceeding concerning the defendant is actually under advisement by the court.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On February 18, 1981, Petitioners were charged in a two count indictment with conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute marijuana in violation of Title 21, U.S.C. §841(a)(1) and §846, and with aiding and abetting the distribution of marijuana in violation of Title 21 U.S.C., §841(a)(1) and Title 18 U.S.C. §2. Also named in both counts of the indictment were Herman Mers and Lester Mers. On March 2, 1981, Petitioners entered pleas of not guilty to the indictment.

On August 5, 1981, a jury was empanelled to try Petitioners along with co-defendants Herman and Lester Mers. All four co-defendants were represented by the same trial counsel, Mr. Bruce Pashley, Esquire. On August 10, 1981, the jury returned a verdict finding each defendant guilty of both counts. Petitioner Myers was sentenced to three years of incarceration on each Count with sentences to run concurrently. Additionally, a special parole term of three years was imposed as to Count Two. Petitioner Ferrante was sentenced to five years on each Count with the sentences to run concurrently. In addition, he was sentenced to a special parole term of five years as to Count Two.

Thereafter, Petitioners retained new counsel, who, on October 14, 1981, filed a Motion for New Trial and for Judgment of Acquittal. On November 25, 1981, an evidentiary hearing on the post-trial motions was conducted by the trial Court. The Court denied the Motions for New Trial and Judgment of Acquittal.

Appeals were taken to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, and on March 21, 1983, that court affirmed the judgment of conviction.

On the evening of Petitioners' arrest, Mr. Bruce Pashley, Esquire, entered into an attorney/client relationship with all four defendants in the instant case. (1st Supp. V.2:28)² Mr. Pashley's law partner, Mr. Scott Mers, is the son of defendant Herman Mers, and the brother of defendant Lester Mers. (1st Supp. V.2:29) Because of this relationship, Mr. Pashley's representation of the Merses was on a pro bono basis. (1st Supp. V.2:29) It was implicitly understood between Mr. Pashley and Herman and Lester Mers that Mr. Pashley would represent Petitioners Ferrante and Myers in the trial of the case. (1st Supp. V.2:32) Initially, Mr. Pashley suggested to Petitioners Ferrante and Myers that he would have no problem representing them through the discovery phases of the case, but that they subsequently would probably want their own lawyer. (1st Supp. V.2:33) The representation, however, ultimately continued through the trial of the case. Petitioner Myers was unable to pay legal fees and Mr. Pashley received no fee from him for his representation. (1st Supp. V.2:34) Petitioner Ferrante paid a nominal $1,050.00 for Mr. Pashley's representation; this payment was made to Mr. Scott Mers. (1st Supp. V.2:31)

On August 5, 1981, the four day trial of the case began with Mr. Pashley representing all four co-defendants. Toward the end of the second day of trial the government became aware that Mr. Pashley intended to raise the defense of entrapment on behalf of co-defendants Herman and Lester Mers. (V.3:150) At that point, the Assistant United States Attorney Wisebram stated:

MR. WISEBRAM: Your Honor, I feel constrained at this point, if I may, to ask the Court once again to ask these defendants if they are willing to waive any conflict of interest. I am sure as Mr. Pashley knows [the informant] never had any contact with any of the defendants other than Mr. Mers, and as such if he is claiming entrapment through [the informant] just for Mr. Mers, I personally feel it may be a potential for some sort of conflict. (V.3:151)

The Court directed a response from Mr. Pashley:

MR. PASHLEY: . . . we have a situation where we do have an entrapment defense as to two defendants. I perhaps should make that very clear. It is with respect to two defendants but that doesn't raise a conflict of interest with respect to me in terms of the other two defendants. It wouldn't be available to them under any circumstances. (V.3:151-152)

Thereafter, Mr. Wisebram stated:

MR. WISEBRAM: Your Honor, I would beg the Court's indulgence on that point. Under Garcia it specifically mandated the Court should question the defendants almost to the degree of a Rule 11 type question- ing, and I would certainly appreciate the Court doing so, to have them make an intelligent and knowing waiver in open court to any potential conflict they may have. (V.3:153) (Emphasis added)

The Court, in the presence of all four defendants, noted the conflict of interest arising from the assertion of an entrapment defense:

THE COURT: Well, I suppose what entrapment says to the jury is I did something wrong but it wasn't my fault. It was the government's fault and to that extent one might argue it runs counter to the idea of maintaining the position you didn't do anything wrong. Do you see what I mean? (V.3:153)

Thereafter, a ten minute recess was taken so that Mr. Pashley could confer with Petitioners Ferrante and Myers. Until that point in the trial, neither Petitioner Ferrante nor Myers knew that entrapment would be raised as a defense. (1st Supp. V.2:50, 61) It was Petitioner Ferrante's testimony at the post-trial hearing on the Motion for New Trial that during the ten minute recess, Mr. Pashley advised him that there was no conflict of interest as far as he and Petitioner Myers were concerned. (1st Supp. V.2:62) At the conclusion of the ten minutes recess, however, neither Petitioner Myers nor Petitioner Ferrante understood what constituted a defense of entrapment, or what constituted a conflict of interest. (1st Supp. V.2:51, 62, 63)

At the conclusion of the recess, Mr. Pashley advised the Court that he had discussed the matter with his clients and invited the Court to proceed with the inquiry. (V.3:154) The Court proceeded to briefly question both Petitioners Ferrante and Myers. Petitioner Myers was asked if he had received an adequate explanation of his position "relative to the defense of entrapment" from his counsel,

Mr. Pashley. The defendant responded in the affirmative. (V.3:154) The Court then asked if Mr. Myers was satisfied with the defense of entrapment being raised on behalf of the defendants Mers. He responded:

MR. MYERS: I am not sure I understand what you are saying. (V.3:154)

The Court then directed a question to Mr. Pashley in an attempt to establish the breadth of the entrapment defense. Mr. Pashley responded:

MR. PASHLEY: . . . The entrapment issue is extremely important with regard to Messrs. Mers. With regard to Mr. Ferrante and Mr. Myers, our position is very simply there is no conspiracy. They never had possession of anything, and what, in fact, they were doing was a favor that had nothing to do with any illegality. I mean they are just plain not guilty of anything I guess is the easiest way to put it plainly. (V.3:155)

The Court then asked Mr. Myers:

THE COURT: . . . Let me ask you this, Mr. Myers: to the extent there is any conflict between your position and that of Mr. Lester Mers and Mr. Herman Mers, do you waive your rights in connection with any such conflict?

MR. MYERS: I don't see any conflict, no, I don't.

THE COURT: If there is a conflict, do you consent to Mr. Pashley representing you as well as Lester and Herman Mers?

MR. MYERS: At this time I do. (V.3:155)

An almost identical line of inquiry was made of Petitioner Ferrante. (V.3:156) This was the only inquiry conducted by the District Court during the course of the trial. In its November 10, 1981 Order denying Appellants' Motion for New Trial, the District Court made as a finding of fact:

With regard to defendants' Motion for a new trial, defendants are correct that the inquiry undertaken by the Court at the request of the government and despite defense counsel's position to the contrary, see Record at 153, with regard to trial counsel's potential conflict of interest, did not meet the requirements of United States v. Garcia, 517 F.2d 272, 278 (5th Cir. 1975). (1st Supp. V.1:144) (Emphasis added)

The evidence adduced at the hearing on the Motion for New Trial further demonstrated that during a week-end recess in the trial proceedings, Mr. Ferrante discussed the trial of his case with a friend and member of the Georgia Bar who told Petitioner Ferrante that in his opinion, one lawyer could not effectively represent all four co-defendants, especially now that the entrapment defense was raised as to defendants Mers. As a result of this discussion, Ferrante approached Mr. Pashley early Monday morning and advised him of his discussion with the attorney and further told Mr. Pashley that he did not think he was getting adequate representation in that he believed there was a conflict of interest. He now wanted to raise the conflict of interest issue before the Court. (1st Supp. V.2:63-64) Petitioner Myers was also present and stated that he wished to raise the issue before the Court.² (1st Supp. V.2:53-54) Mr. Pashley advised both co-defendants that at this late stage in the proceedings, he would advise his clients not to raise the conflict of interest issue as it would only succeed in irritating the judge. (1st Supp. V.2:54, 65)

Later in the afternoon of August 10, 1981, the jury returned a verdict finding Appellants guilty as charged.

² The discussion between Mr. Pashley and Appellants Ferrante and Myers occurred on Monday morning, August 10, 1981, just prior to closing argument.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

- I. The opinion of the Court of Appeals below creates conflicts in the decisions of the Court of Appeals; this case raises important federal questions which have not been, but should be, settled by this Court.
- A. Review by this Court of provisions of the Speedy Trial Act, 18 United States Code, Section 3161, et seq., is necessary to explicate the computation of time limitations contemplated by the Act and to clarify the application of appropriate sanctions for noncompliance.

Pursuant to the Speedy Trial Act, Title 18, U.S.C., §3161 et seq., a defendant's trial must commence within 70 days of his arrest or indictment, whichever occurs last. The accounting of time under the Act is subject to excludable delay attributable to the defendant as well as other particularized delays as set out in Section 3161(h)(1) of the Act.

In the case at bar the Petitioners were arrested on February 6, 1981 and were indicted on February 18, 1981; the speedy trial time under the Act, therefore, began to run on February 18, 1981. Speedy Trial Act, §3161(c)(1).

On March 13, 1981, numerous motions were filed on behalf of the Defendants before the Magistrate. Since one of the motions required an evidentiary hearing, said hearing was scheduled. After several postponements of said hearing, the Government informed the Magistrate that it would not seek to introduce the evidence which the Defendants hoped to suppress at said hearing and therefore the hearing was not necessary. On this date, April 22, 1981, after being informed that the previously scheduled hearing was unnecessary the Magistrate orally ruled on all of the Defendants' motions.⁴

On May 18, 1981, the Magistrate filed his Report and Recommendation which stated in writing his previous rulings of April 22, 1981. No objections were filed to said Report and Recommendation and the District Court adopted said Report on August 3, 1981. Also on that date, defense counsel filed a Motion to Dismiss the Indictment based upon a violation of the Speedy Trial Act. That Motion was denied and Petitioners were brought to trial on August 5, 1981.

In evaluating the various proceedings in the instant case and the excludable time under the Speedy Trial Act for said proceedings, the panel in the case at bar determined that the forty-one (41) days from March 13 to April 22, were excludable for motions practice before the Magistrate pursuant to §3161(h)(1)(F). The Court further determined that the twenty-six (26) days from April 22 to May 18, were excludable pursuant to §3161(h)(1)(J) as motions which were under advisement by the Magistrate. Finally, the panel concluded that the District Court had thirty (30) days from June 2 to July 1, of excludable time during which the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation was under advisement by the District Court under §3161(h)(1)(J) at 2145.

The panel's decision to exclude a total of fifty-six (56) days pursuant to the "under advisement" section of §3161(h)(1)(J) after the Magistrate had ruled on all motions is absolutely irreconcilable with the language of the statute, the Judicial Guidelines to the statute, and prior decisions of the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

Section 3161(h)(1)(J) permits the exclusion of time under the Speedy Trial Act for any delay reasonably attributable to any period, not to exceed thirty (30) days, during which any proceeding concerning the defendant is actually under advisement by the court. (Emphasis added). In speaking to this section the Judicial Guidelines issued by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts stated that:

(J) Proceedings Under Advisement

Starting date. The starting date is the date following the date on which the court has received everything it expects from the parties, examining physicians, etc., before reaching a decision. It is normally the date following the expiration of an exclusion under subparagraph (A), (B), (F), or (G).

Ending Date.

The ending date is the earliest of (1) the date the judge's decision is filed, (2) the date the judge renders his decision orally in open court, or (3) the expiration of the thirty (30) day maximum period. Guidelines to the Administration of the Speedy Trial Act of 1979, as amended 42-43 (1981). As cited in United States v. Bufalino, 683 F.2d 639 (2nd Cir. 1982).

In the case at bar the Magistrate received the Defendants' motions on March 13, 1981. On April 22, 1981, after learning that an evidentiary hearing would not be needed on any of the motions, the Magistrate orally ruled on all motions. Consequently, the time from March 13 to April 22, was excludable pursuant to §3161(h)(1)(F). After April 22, there was nothing "under advisement" by the Magistrate and consequently any exclusion under §3161(h)(1)(J) was improper. The case at bar represents exactly that situation which the Judicial Guidelines referred to when the starting date of the "under advisement" section begins following the expiration of an exclusion under another subparagraph (in this case subparagraph F). The ending date for said "under advisement" section is "the date the judge renders his decision orally in open court." In this case that occurred on April 22, and consequently thereafter there was nothing "under advisement" by the Magistrate.

This exact question, the interrelationship between subparagraph (F) and (J) was resolved by another panel of the Eleventh Circuit in the recent decision of United States v. Stafford, 697 F.2d 1368 (11th Cir. 1983). The holding of that panel was exactly inapposite to the ruling rendered by the panel in the instant case. In Stafford the panel stated:

The exclusion in (F) is granted in two situations and applies differently depending on which situation occurs. The first is when a pretrial motion requires a hearing. If a hearing is held, (F) by its terms excludes without qualification the entire period between the filing of the motion and the conclusion of the hearing. The second situation in (F) applies to motions which result in 'prompt disposition'. For these motions, the period of exclusion begins at the filing of the motion and ends at the point of its 'prompt disposition'. The inclusion of the promptness requirement was intended to provide a point at which time will cease to be excluded, where motions are decided on the papers filed without hearing. 697 at 1373.

In speaking to the relationship between (F) and (J) the Court in Stafford stated:

(F) apparently does not exclude time in a third situation—namely, where the motion requires no hearing and its disposition is not prompt. In this situation, however, (J) permits an exclusion of up to thirty (30) days from the time the motion is 'actually under advisement' by the court. 697 at 1373.

In the case at bar the Magistrate ruled on all motions on the papers filed without a hearing on April 22, 1981. Said ruling was consistent with subparagraph (F) and constituted a "prompt disposition" of all motions under subparagraph (F). In such a situation there was absolutely nothing after April 22 which was "actually under advisement" by the Magistrate. Consequently, subparagraph (J) was neither necessary nor applicable. Stafford, supra.

In speaking to its interpretation of subsection (F) and (J) the Court in Stafford stated:

Our interpretation of (F) and (J) is consistent with United States v. DeLongchamps, 679 F.2d 217-220 (11th Cir. 1982), in which we held that no more than thirty (30) days could be excluded for pretrial motions which did not require hearings. 697 at 1374.

In the case at bar the panel concluded that after all motions had been orally ruled upon it was proper to exclude twenty-six (26) days pursuant to the "under advisement" section and an additional thirty (30) days pursuant to said section for the District Court. To permit a fifty-six (56) day delay after all motions have been ruled upon is entirely inconsistent with the Speedy Trial Act, the Judicial Guidelines to said Act and most importantly the previous decisions of the Eleventh Circuit in DeLongchamps and Stafford.

- II. The decision of the Court of Appeals below is in conflict with applicable decisions and statutory authority that are binding precedent upon that Court.
 - A. The Court of Appeals failed to apply the principles of United States v. Garcia, 517 F.2d 272 (5th Cir. 1975) and the Court of Appeals decision is contrary to the mandate of Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 44(c).

Petitioners contend that because a single defense attorney represented all four co-defendants at trial and divergent defenses were propounded, they were denied a fundamentally fair trial and their right to effective assistance of counsel.

The Eleventh Circuit Panel that rendered the instant opinion unanimously found that:

... neither the probing inquiry mandated by Rule 44(c) nor that required by Garcia was satisfied in this case. The district court did not specifically advise defendants of their right to separate representation, as required by Rule 44(c). The district court judge candidly admitted failing to comply with Garcia.

United States v. Mers, 701 F.2d 1321, 1326 (11th Cir. 1983).

The panel then concluded that notwithstanding the compounded error, reversal was not mandated unless the multiple representation constituted an actual conflict of interest. Petitioners respectfully submit that the panel decision was in conflict with Eleventh Circuit precedent and in contravention to Rule 44(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

In United States v. Garcia, 517 F.2d 272 (5th Cir. 1975), which is binding precedent upon the Eleventh Circuit, the Court addressed the issue of a criminal defendant's right to retain counsel of his own choice even though the trial court considered counsel to be disqualified because of a conflict of interest. In holding that the defendants have the privilege of waiving their constitutional right to conflict-free counsel, the Court instructed the District Court to hold a hearing on remand in order to ascertain whether the defendants were knowingly and voluntarily waiving their Sixth Amendment protections. The Garcia Court recognized "the unchallenged importance of the need for adequate representation during criminal proceedings." (At 277). The Court, however, did not require a showing that an actual conflict existed. In the instant case, the panel determined that the inquiry mandated by Garcia was not satisfied.

Rule 44(c), promulgated by this Court and given legislative embodiment by Congress is directory upon the Courts, and provides that when a potential conflict of interest arises, "the Court shall promptly inquire . . . and shall personally advise each defendant of his right to the effective assistance of counsel." In the case sub judice, the panel concluded that the district court's failure to inquire constituted error under Rule 44(c). Petitioners respectfully submit that where the error is compounded because of the trial court's non-compliance with both statutory mandates and Circuit precedent, and the double procedural error rises to a constitutional deprivation, reversal should be mandated.

The Panel opinion cites to the Advisory Committee Note to Rule 44(c) for the proposition that failure to conduct a proper Rule 44(c) inquiry, standing alone, would not require reversal. However, the Committee Note continues:

as is currently the case, a reviewing court is more likely to assume a conflict resulted from the joint representation when no inquiry or an inadequate inquiry was conducted.

Advisory Committee Note, 77 F.R.D. 507, 603 (1978).

In the instant case, the failure to conduct a Rule 44(c) inquiry was compounded by the Garcia violation. Clearly, as the legislative intent demonstrates, it must be assumed that a conflict resulted from Mr. Pashley's joint representation.

Moreover, Petitioners contend that the Panel erroneously misapplied United States v. Benavidez, 664 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, ____ U.S. ____, 102 S.Ct. 2963, 73 L.Ed.2d 1352; and United States v. Alvarez, 696 F.2d 1307 (11th Cir. 1983), in affirming their convictions.

Alvarez, supra, a recent Eleventh Circuit case interpreting the Rule 44(c) requirement, is distinguishable. In Alvarez, two co-defendants were represented by the same counsel. Alvarez challenged the trial court's failure to follow Rule 44(c) and contended that a conflict was present because the co-defendant testified at trial and Alvarez did not. Alvarez did not challenge the testimony of the co-defendant as in any way adverse to his defense, but only alleged that he was prejudiced by the co-defendant's mere act of testifying. The Court determined that that the fact that the co-defendant took the stand, does not, without more, prove the existence of an actual conflict. In the instant case, Appellants challenge the multiple representation of all four co-defendants by a single attorney who attempted to propound three divergent defenses. Clearly, the error alleged in Alvarez is innocuous compared to problems that were apparent in the instant trial.

Benavidez, too, is inapplicable and moreover is not binding on the Circuit Court.

Petitioners nevertheless have demonstrated that an actual conflict of interest existed. Recently in Baty v. Balkom, 661 F.2d 391 (5th Cir. 1981), the Court discussed the standard to be applied in determining whether a conflict of interest situation would give rise to a Sixth Amendment violation:

For a conflict of interest to cause representation to fail Sixth Amendment standards, this Circuit requires that the conflict be actual, not speculative. An actual conflict exists if counsel's introduction of probative evidence or plausible arguments that would significantly benefit one defendant would damage the defense of another defendant whom the same counsel is representing. At 395. (Emphasis added).

In the instant case, the defenses presented by Mr. Pashley for the four co-defendants ran the whole gamut of the defense spectrum. Herman Mers claimed that he was guilty of the crime charged, but that he was a victim of entrapment by the government. Lester Mers, because he had no contact with the government agent, did not have the entrapment defense available to him. Nevertheless, he endeavored to claim entrapment under the theory that since his father was entrapped, as his son he had no choice but to help his father. As to Appellants Ferrante and Myers, Mr. Pashley advanced the argument that they were simply "Johnny come latelys" who played no part whatsoever in the conspiracy, notwithstanding the entrapment of Herman Mers. In this factual context, it was impossible for Mr. Pashley to credibly plead the cases of his four clients.

Mr. Pashley did not raise the entrapment defense as to co-defendants Herman and Lester Mers until half way through the trial. Neither the government nor Petitioners were aware that this defense would be raised until it became apparent at trial. Upon learning this, the government immediately requested that the court make the Garcia inquiry. Obviously, if Herman and Lester Mers claimed that they were guilty of the crime, but entrapped by government agents. Petitioners' defense that they had no knowledge of the alleged marijuana conspiracy became significantly less plausible in the eyes of the jury. The government recognized this conflict inherent in the divergent defenses when it again requested that the court obtain a waiver from the co-defendants. The instant case is clearly one where the arguments propounded by Herman and Lester Mers significantly damaged Appellants' defense. Thus, the standard set forth in Baty, supra, is applicable here. Mr. Pashley's effectiveness was impaired by undertaking representation of all four co-defendants, but in addition each of the defendant's defense and credibility was diluted in the eyes of the jury. Had separate counsel propounded the separate and incompatible defenses, certainly the defendants would have been in a much better position to persuade the jury that their testimony was meaningful and truthful.

This Court should grant certiorari in this case both for the purpose of resolving conflicts within the Court of Appeals and for the purpose of settling a disputed question of statutory interpretation, confusion over which could have grave consequences in the area of criminal law and procedure.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully requested that this Honorable Court issue a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

APPENDIX

APPENDIX A
UNITED STATES of America,
Plaintiff-Appellee,

v.

Herman MERS, Lester Mers, Randy
James Myers, Paul J. Ferrante,
Defendants-Appellants.

No. 81-7777.

United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

March 21, 1983.

Four defendants were convicted in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia at Atlanta, Orinda D. Evans, J., of conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute marijuana and aiding and abetting distribution of marijuana. Defendants appealed. The Court of Appeals, Vance, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) single defense attorney's representation of all four defendants at trial did not violate right to effective assistance of counsel, as claimed by three of the defendants, and (2) two defendants were not, as they claimed, brought to trial in violation of the Speedy Trial Act.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law 641.5, 1166.11

District court erred in failing to conduct adequate hearing on issue whether joint representation of multiple defendants in prosecution for conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute marijuana and aiding and abetting distribution of marijuana created actual conflict of interest, but error was harmless, there being no actual conflict of interest. Fed.Rules Cr.Proc. Rule 44(c), 18 U.S.C.A.; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6; Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, §§ 401(a), (a)(1), 406, 21 U.S.C.A. §§ 841(a), (a)(1), 846; 18 U.S.C.A. § 2.

2. Criminal Law 641.5

Where joint representation of defendants is proposed, court should address each defendant individually and advise him of potential dangers of joint representation, and defendants must have opportunity to question court about nature and consequences of their legal representation. Fed.Rules Cr.Proc. Rule 44(c), 18 U.S.C.A.; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6.

3. Criminal Law 641.5

Mere fact of joint representation does not show actual conflict, which will not be found unless defendants can point to specific instances in the record to suggest actual conflict or impairment of their interest. Fed.Rules Cr. Proc. Rule 44(c), 18 U.S.C.A.; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6.

4. Criminal Law 641.5

There is no violation where asserted conflict arising from joint representation of multiple defendants is irrelevant or merely hypothetical; rather, there must be actual, significant conflict. Fed.Rules Cr.Proc. Rules 44(c), 44 note, 18 U.S.C.A.; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6.

5. Criminal Law 641.5

No actual conflict of interest was shown to have arisen from joint representation of multiple defendants, some of whom claimed entrapment and some of whom claimed nonparticipation, the defenses being not antagonistic, and not mutually exclusive. Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, §§ 401(a), [2134] (a)(1), 406, 21 U.S.C.A. §§ 841(a), (a)(1), 846; 18 U.S.C.A. § 2; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6; Fed.Rules Cr.Proc. Rules 44(c), 44 note, 18 U.S.C.A.

6. Criminal Law 641.5

Failing to adopt strategy of shifting blame may well give rise to actual conflict of interest, but to do so the strategy must have been option realistically available to trial counsel. Fed.Rules Cr.Proc. Rules 44(c), 18 U.S.C.A.; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6.

7. Criminal Law 577.8

Assuming that 70-day period under Speedy Trial Act began to run on March 2, 1981, date on which defendants were arraigned, 41-day period between March 13 and April 22 for motions practice before magistrate, 26-day period from April 22 to May 18 during which magistrate had motions under advisement and 30-day period, June 2 to July 1, during which magistrate's report and recommendation were under advisement by district court were all properly excludable. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3161-3168, 3161(c) (1, 2), (h), (h)(1), (h)(1)(F, J), (h)(3)(A).

8. Criminal Law 577.5, 577.8

Speedy Trial Act provision that trial must commence "not less than 30 days from the date on which the defendant first appears through counsel" was intended to prevent trial from being held so quickly that a defendant would not have time to prepare, and such minimum time period is measured as 30 calendar days from event triggering speedy trial clock, and, under the Speedy Trial Act, excludable delay is permitted during first 30-day interval. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3161-3168, 3161(c)(1, 2), (h), (h)(1), (h)(1)(F, J), (h)(3)(A).

9. Criminal Law 577.8

Under Speedy Trial Act, 30-day "under advisement" exclusion is not total for both magistrate and district court, but, rather, Act permits two 30-day periods for consideration of the same matter. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3161(h)(1)(F, G, J); 28 U.S.C.A. § 636(h)(1).

10. Criminal Law 577.8

Magistrate's report on pretrial motions cannot automatically become order of court merely because no party objects, and, under Speedy Trial Act, district court was entitled to 30-day "under advisement" period despite want of objections to magistrate's report and recommendation. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3161(h)(1)(F, G, J); 28 U.S.C.A. § 636(h)(1).

11. Criminal Law 577.8

Phrase "actually under advisement" in reference to motions practice under speedy trial statute requires that under-advisement period be reasonable, but leaves determination of reasonableness issue to sound discretion of trial judge, who is not required to demonstrate that he or she was actually considering matter on every excludable day. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3161(h)(1)(J); 28 U.S.C.A. § 636(b)(1), (h)(1); U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

12. Criminal Law 577.8

For Speedy Trial Act to work, parties must know, as each day passes, whether or not that day is excludable, courts being under duty to insure ability of courts to administer the Act. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3161, 3161(h)(1).

13. Conspiracy 47(12)
Drugs and Narcotics 123

Government's having met requirement that statements of coconspirator are admissible only if there is substantial independent evidence of conspiracy, evidence of making of such statements was admissible, and such evidence, with other testimony by drug enforcement agents, was sufficient to support convictions of two defendants for conspiracy and aiding and abetting. Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, §§ 401(a), (a)(1), 406, 21 U.S.C.A. §§ 841(a), (a)(1), 846; 18 U.S.C.A. § 2; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6; Fed.Rules Evid. Rule 801(d)(2)(E), 28 U.S.C.A.

14. Criminal Law 37.3

Defendant cannot avail himself of entrapment defense unless initiator of his criminal activity is acting as agent of the Government, and any inducements to codefendant to traffic in drugs could not support finding of entrapment, such vicarious entrapment theory being not the law. Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, §§ 401(a), (a)(1), 406, 21 U.S.C.A. §§ 841(a), (a)(1), 846.

15. Constitutional Law 257.5

Facts of case did not suggest "full circle" transaction violating defendant's due process rights, defendants having stipulated at trial that no DEA agents supplied marijuana to government informant or to defendant husband or to his defendant wife, and there being also no evidence that undercover agent supplied the marijuana. Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, §§ 401(a), (a)(1), 406, 21 U.S.C.A. §§ 841(a), (a)(1), 846;

[2135]

18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2, 3161 et seq.; U.S.C.A. Const. Amends. 5, 6, 14.

16. Constitutional Law 268(5)

Defendants failed to show that their due process rights under Brady were violated by government's refusal to disclose undercover agent's arrest record and withholding of material relating to existence of any remunerative agreement between undercover agent and government, absent any theory offered by defendants as to how such material could have been relevant, admissible evidence, and where such undercover agent was not called as witness. Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, §§ 401(a), (a)(1), 406, 21 U.S.C.A. §§ 841(a), (a)(1), 846; 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2, 3161 et seq.; U.S.C.A. Const. Amends. 5, 6, 14; Fed. Rules Evid. Rules 404(b), 608, 609, 28 U.S.C.A.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia.

Before HILL and VANCE, Circuit Judges, and TUTTLE, Senior Circuit Judge.

VANCE, Circuit Judge.

The four appellants, Herman Mers, Lester Mers, Paul Ferrante and Randy Myers, appeal convictions for conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute marijuana, 21 U.S.C. §§ 841(a), 846, and aiding and abetting the distribution of marijuana, 21 U.S.C. § 841(a)(1) and 18 U.S.C. § 2. Appellants raise divergent issues before this court but only two require serious treatment: whether a single defense attorney's representation of all four appellants at trial violated the right to effective assistance of counsel of Ferrante, Myers and Herman Mers, and whether Herman and Lester Mers were brought to trial within the time required by the Speedy Trial Act.

Their arrest on February 6, 1981 resulted from Herman Mers and his son Lester Mers having undertaken to sell a large quantity of marijuana to undercover DEA agents. Myers and Ferrante acted as armed guards during the planned exchange of the first 2,000 pounds. The Mers plead entrapment, contending that their involvement in the transaction resulted from pressure on Herman Mers by his neighbor, Michael Fiori, who was acting as a government informant. Myers and Ferrante claimed that they knew nothing of the marijuana, they were told that the marijuana-laden truck contained antiques which they were helping to protect merely as a favor to Lester Mers.

In January, 1981, Herman Mers and two undercover DEA agents flew to Atlanta to arrange the purchase. Over the succeeding week the plans were finalized. Between February 2nd and 6th, there were numerous meetings and conversations between the Mers and the DEA agents. Surreptitious tape recording of these conversations were introduced into evidence at trial. The conspirators agreed that Lester Mers would deliver the marijuana to one agent, while his father and another agent would remain at a restaurant. After the transfer of the drugs was completed the key to the safe deposit box containing the money would be delivered to the Mers.

On February 6, Lester Mers accompanied a DEA agent to obtain the 2,000 pounds of marijuana from Lester's home. After examining the marijuana, which was stored in a truck, the agent told a second agent to drive the truck to New York. Paul Ferrante and Randy Myers were in a car a block away from the Mers' home while the marijuana was being inspected. One of the DEA agents testified that Ferrante and Myers began to follow the marijuana-laden truck. As they drove by and stopped, however, Lester Mers said "don't worry about the marijuana. Follow me. These guys are good for the money." Ferrante and Myers then followed Lester Mers and the agent to the restaurant where Herman Mers was waiting. As the party left the restaurant for the place where the money was actually to be exchanged, all four appellants were arrested. Ferrante was armed with a Luger pistol and a .38 caliber handgun, Ferrante was carrying a .357 magnum and agents found a .30 caliber rifle in the back seat of the car.

Joint Representation of Multiple Defendants

[1] Bruce Pashley, an Atlanta criminal defense attorney, represented all four defendants from their arrest until the end of their trial. Appellants contend that Pashley's multiple representation created an actual conflict of interest which was not sufficiently exposed due to the district court's failure to conduct an adequate hearing under the criteria of Fed.R.Crim.P. 44(c) and United States v. Garcia, 517 F.2d 272 (5th Cir.1975). We hold that although the district court erred in failing to conduct an adequate hearing on the conflict of interest issue, that error was harmless because no actual conflict of interest existed in this case.

We agree with appellants that the district court's failure to make full inquiry concerning the conflict issue violated Rule 44(c) and Garcia. Rule 44(c) provides that whenever two or more criminal defendants who have been jointly charged are represented by the same counsel, the court "shall personally advise each defendant of his rights to the effective assistance of counsel, including separate representation." Garcia [2137] articulated the standard for determining whether a defendant has voluntarily waived his right to conflict-free counsel. In Garcia, defendants in a federal criminal proceeding selected counsel to represent them. The trial court refused to allow the retained attorneys to serve as counsel because of a conflict of interest. In holding that defendants have the privilege of waiving their constitutional right to conflict-free counsel, the Fifth circuit remanded the case for a hearing to ascertain whether the defendants had knowingly and voluntarily waived their Sixth Amendment protections.

[2] The court detailed the procedures to be followed in making this determination, stating that district courts should adhere to a procedure similar to that promulgated in Fed.R.Crim.P. 11. 517 F.2d at 278. The court should address each defendant individually and advise him of the potential dangers of joint representation. The defendants must have the opportunity to question the court about the nature and consequences of their legal representation. "Most importantly, the district court should obtain a response from each defendant indicating that he has been advised of his right to effective representation, that he understands the details of the attorney's possible conflict of interest and the potential perils of such a conflict and that he voluntarily waives his Sixth Amendment protections." Id. at 278.

The district court was aware of attorney Pashley's potential conflict of interest. During the second day of trial, when the government's counsel learned that Pashley intended to raise the defense of entrapment on behalf of Herman and Lester Mers, he requested that the court conduct a Garcia hearing. The court asked Pashley whether he had discussed the matter with his clients. Pashley answered that he had not discussed it in the context of a conflict problem, since he saw no conflict. The court then described to the defendants the nature of the entrapment defense, after which she recessed the proceedings so that Ferrante and Myers, who were not asserting the defense of entrapment, could confer with Pashley.

Following the recess, Pashley advised the court that he had discussed the matter with his clients and invited the court to proceed with its inquiry. The judge then personally addressed Myers and Ferrante and determined that each felt that he had received an adequate explanation of his position relative to the entrapment defense advanced by the Mers. During this colloquy, Pashley noted that he was asserting an entrapment defense only with regard to the Mers and that his defense with regard to Ferrante and Myers was that they were simply doing a friend a favor, that they had conspired with no one and that they were guilty of nothing. The court then asked Myers:

THE COURT: . . . To the extent there is any conflict between your position and that of Mr. Lester Mers and Mr. Herman Mers, do you waive your rights in connection with any such conflict?

MR. MYERS: I don't see any conflict, no, I don't.

THE COURT: If there is a conflict, do you consent to Mr. Pashley representing you as well as Lester and Herman Mers?

MR. MYERS: At this time, I do.

THE COURT: All right, and do you have any objection to Mr. Pashley raising the entrapment defense as he indicated he would?

MR. MYERS: No, Your Honor.

An almost identical line of inquiry was made of Ferrante. In a post trial order [2138] disposing of defendants' request for judgment NOV or a new trial, the court observed that "[d]efendants are correct that the inquiry undertaken by the Court at the request of the Government and despite defense counsel's position to the contrary, with regard to trial counsel's potential conflict of interest, did not meet the requirements of United States v. Garcia" In a later evidentiary hearing the judge admitted that "the admonition the Court gave to the defendants was not specific enough because it did not detail to the defendants exactly the nature of the conflict."

Thus, neither the probing inquiry mandated by rule 44(c) nor that required by Garcia was satisfied in this case. The district court did not specifically advise defendants of their right to separate representation, as required by Rule 44(c). The district court judge candidly admitted failing to comply with Garcia. But although her inquiry constituted error under Garcia and Rule 44(c), that error will not require reversal unless Pashley's representation of these multiple defendants did in fact constitute an actual conflict of interest.

[3. 4] Although joint representation of multiple criminal defendants creates a danger of counsel conflict of interest, the "mere fact of joint representation will certainly not show an actual conflict." United States v. Medal, 592 F.2d 1305, 1310 (5th Cir.1979). Accord Holloway v. Arkansas, 445 U.S. 475, 482, 98 S.Ct. 1173, 1177-78, 55 L.Ed.2d 426 (1978); United States v. Burroughs, 650 F.2d 595, 598 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1037, 102 S.Ct. 580, 70 L.Ed.2d 483 (1981); Foxworth v. Wainwright, 516 F.2d 1072, 1076 (5th Cir.1975). Further, failure to comply with Garcia will not mandate reversal absent an actual conflict of interest. In United States v. Benavidez, 664 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, ____ U.S. ____, 102

S.Ct. 2963, 73 L.Ed.2d 1352 (1982), a defendant argued that noncompliance with Rule 44(c) required reversal notwithstanding his failure to demonstrate actual conflict. The present Fifth circuit rejected this argument, noting that the purpose behind Rule 44(c) was to "establish[] a procedure for avoiding the occurrence of events which might otherwise give rise to a plausible post-conviction claim" concerning conflict of interest. Id. (quoting Advisory Committee on Criminal Rules, Note to Rule 44(c), in Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure of the Judicial Conference of the United States, Preliminary Draft of Proposed Amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure (February 1978) reprinted in 77 F.R.D. 507, 594 (1978) (Advisory Committee Note)) at 1258. The court held that "neither the inquiry nor the advice is itself the goal of the rule; the goal is preventing conflicts. If there is no actual conflict, then the rule's purpose will not be served by reversal of a conviction." 664 F.2d at 1258.

In United States v. Alvarez, 696 F.2d 1307 (11th Cir. 1983), we found the above reasoning from Benavidez persuasive. It would be the height of formalism to reverse a conviction because of literal noncompliance with a procedural rule when the evil that the rule has been designed to prevent has never occurred. The Advisory Committee Note to Rule 44(c) supports this construction: "The failure in a particular case to conduct a Rule 44(c) inquiry would not, standing alone, necessitate the reversal of a conviction of a jointly represented defendant." Advisory Committee Note, 77 F.R.D. 507, 603 (1978). Thus, appellants must demonstrate that Pashley's joint representation constituted an actual conflict of interest.

Three Supreme Court cases, Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 62 S.Ct. 457, 86 L.Ed. 680 (1942), Holloway v. Arkansas, 435 U.S. 475, 98 S.Ct. 1173, 55 L.Ed.2d 426 (1978) and Cuyler v. Sullivan, 446 U.S. 335, 100 S.Ct. 1708, 64 L.Ed.2d 333 (1980), define the standard for analyzing claims that counsel "suffered under a disability [such as conflict of interest] that subtly pervaded his entire conduct of the defense." Stanley v. Zant.¹ The Court in Glasser established the principle that counsel's conflicting loyalties in multiple representation cases could lead to an unconstitutional impairment of a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to effective representation. Glasser and Kretske were codefendants in a conspiracy case. Despite Glasser's objection, the district court appointed Glasser's attorney to represent Kretske as well. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the assistance of counsel "guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment contemplates that such assistance be untrammelled and unimpaired by a court order requiring that one lawyer shall ¹ Our conflict of interest cases may be contrasted with the approach we take in analyzing cases such as Washington v. Strickland, 693 F.2d 1243 (5th Cir.1982) and Stanley v. Zant, 697 F.2d 955 (11th Cir.1983) in which criminal defendants assert on appeal that "counsel's actual performance was inadequate, that specific actions or omissions of his attorney rendered his representation ineffective." Stanley v. Zant, 697 F.2d at 962. The differences between these two general types of ineffectiveness have been discussed at length by courts and commentators alike. Professor Waltz distinguished between "extrinsic" pressures interfering with counsel's representation (such as conflicts of interest) and "intrinsic" ineffectiveness (such as failure to present defendant's only possible defense). See Waltz, Inadequacy of Trial Defense Representation as a Ground for Post-Conviction Relief in Criminal Cases, 59 Nw.U.L.Rev. 289, 326-41, 301-326 (1964). Compare Washington v. Strickland (en banc) (requiring prejudice in cases of intrinsic ineffectiveness) with Baty v. Balkcom, 661 F.2d 391 (5th Cir.1981), cert. denied, ____ U.S. ____, 102 S.Ct. 2307, 7 L.Ed.2d 1308 (1982) (not requiring prejudice in cases of extrinsic ineffectiveness).

simultaneously represent conflicting interests." 315 U.S. at 70, 62 S.Ct. at 465. Although ambiguous language in Glasser led courts to confusion regarding the test for demonstrating conflict of interest and for the need to show prejudice in multiple representation cases, see Lowenthal, Joint Representation in Criminal Cases: A Central Appraisal, 64 Va.L.Rev. 939, 973-74 (1978); Comment, Conflict of Interests in Multiple Representation of Criminal Co-Defendants, 68 J.Crim.L. & Criminology 226 (1977), under the facts of Glasser itself the conflict of interest was actual and ascertainable on appellate review. The conflict was underscored by defense counsel's cross-examination and in his attempts to counter evidence introduced by the government. Counsel's cross-examination of prosecution witnesses was circumscribed and hesitant, and in at least one instance the defense attorney conducted no cross-examination at all. The Supreme Court found that such conduct raised an inference that counsel's trial strategy was infected by conflicting obligations and divided loyalties. See Comment, 68 J.Crim.L. & Criminology, supra, at 230-31.

The Supreme Court reexamined the multiple representation issue in Holloway v. Arkansas. In Holloway, the district court appointed one public defender to represent three defendants charged with rape and robbery. The court denied defense counsel's repeated requests for appointment of separate counsel. As in Glasser, the Supreme Court inferred the conflict from counsel's actions and inactions at trial. The attorney for the defendants informed the court, in the presence of the jury, that [2140] despite his recommendation to the contrary all defendants wished to testify. Counsel argued that a conflict of interest was inevitable: he could not effectively examine any given defendant who was on the witness stand, because he had received information from each individually. The trial court rejected counsel's argument that he was bound to protect the interests of the nontestifying defendants while a codefendant was testifying. The attorney refused to question any of the defendants and they testified in a narrative form. Before each defendant took the stand, counsel stated that "I cannot ask you any questions that might tend to incriminate any one of the three of you" 435 U.S. at 480, 98 S.Ct. at 1176. The Supreme Court reversed the convictions, concluding that the trial judge erred in failing "either to appoint separate counsel or to take adequate steps to ascertain whether the risk of a conflict of interest] was too remote to warrant separate counsel." Id. at 484, 98 S.Ct. at 1178. The Court strongly implied that reversal would be automatic "whenever a trial court improperly requires joint representation over timely objection." Id. Because the trial record may mask so much, and because a "conflict of interest hobbles the defense in a manner distinct from other forms of ineffectiveness," Tague, Multiple Representation and Conflicts of Interest in Criminal Cases, 67 Geo.L.J. 1075, 1077 (1979), an appellant asserting conflict of interest need not make a further showing of prejudice. See Holloway, 435 U.S. at 489-91, 98 S.Ct. at 1181-82; Baty v. Balkcom, 661 F.2d 391, 395 (5th Cir.1981), cert. denied, ____ U.S. ____, 102 S.Ct. 2307, 73 L.Ed.2d 1308 (1982).

Most recently, in Cuyler v. Sullivan, 446 U.S. 335, 100 S.Ct. 1708, 64 L.Ed.2d 333 (1980), the Supreme Court stated that "the possibility of conflict is insufficient to impugn a criminal conviction. In order to demonstrate a violation of his Sixth Amendment rights, a defendant must establish that an actual conflict of interest adversely affected his lawyer's performance." Id. at 350, 100 S.Ct. at 1719; see also United States v. Freeman, 619 F.2d 1112, 1122 (5th Cir.1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 910, 101 S.Ct. 1348, 67 L.Ed.2d 334 (1981); United States v. Fox, 613 F.2d 99, 102 (5th Cir.1980). We have held that "the standard imposed by the Supreme Court in Cuyler is met by proof of an actual conflict of interest. As a component of that proof, of course, petitioner also must show that counsel with the conflict was representing the petitioner actively." Baty v. Balkcom, 661 F.2d at 397.

We will not find an actual conflict unless appellants can point to "specific instances in the record to suggest an actual conflict or impairment of their interests." United States v. Fox, 613 F.2d at 102. Appellants must make a factual showing of inconsistent interests and must demonstrate that the attorney "made a choice between possible alternative courses of action, such as eliciting (or failing to elicit) evidence helpful to one client but harmful to the other. If he did not make such a choice, the conflict remained hypothetical." Comment, 68 J.Crim.L. & Criminology, supra, at 232 (parenthese in original). There is no violation where the conflict is "irrelevant or merely hypothetical"; there must be an "actual, significant conflict." Foxworth, 516 F.2d at 1077 n. 7. An actual conflict exists when the respective defenses of multiple defendants are inconsistent, i.e., if "introduction of probative evidence or plausible arguments that would significantly benefit one defendant would damage the defense of another defendant whom the same counsel is repre-[2141] senting." Baty, 661 F.2d at 395. The Benavidez court noted that the former Fifth Circuit cases reversing convictions on the ground of actual conflict of interest could be classified as falling into at least one of three rubrics:

(1) the conflict was brought to the trial court's attention at the outset of the trial or at the time when the conflict first became apparent; (2) one defendant had evidence that would have exculpated himself but inculpated a codefendant; (3) the prosecution's evidence offered defendant a theory under which he could prove his own innocence by proving his codefendant's guilt.

664 F.2d at 1259 (footnotes omitted).

Appellants Ferrante, Myers and Lester Mers argue that their various defenses were incompatible with the entrapment defense asserted by Herman Mers and that Pashley's representation of all appellants gave rise to an actual conflict of interest. Herman Mers admitted at trial that he was guilty of the acts charged, but argued that he had been entrapped by the government's informant. Lester Mers asserted a variant of the entrapment defense. Because he had no direct contact with the government's informant, he did not have the classical entrapment defense available to him. Nevertheless, he endeavored to claim entrapment under the theory that, since his father Herman was entrapped and as a son he had no choice but to help his father, he also was entrapped. Ferrante and Myers argued, by contrast, that they played no part whatever in the conspiracy, that they thought they were guarding a truck full of valuable antiques.

Ferrante and Myers contend on appeal that the presence of Herman Mers' entrapment defense and Lester Mers' hybrid agency theory/entrapment defense damaged the effectiveness of their own defenses. From an evidentiary and a psychological perspective, they argue, it was impossible for a single counsel credibly to argue all four cases, especially when all four defendants took the stand to tell their divergent stories. Ferrante and Myers further argue that counsel's divided loyalties resulted in a significantly greater emphasis on the defenses of the Mers. Finally, they urge that the desperate nature of the entrapment defense assured that all four defendants would be jointly shot down as "birds of a feather." Similarly, Herman Mers argues that his entrapment defense was diluted and was prejudiced by the court's finding that Lester Mers could not avail himself of the entrapment defense.

Judge Evans found that, despite the disparity in defenses, counsel was not laboring under an actual conflict of interest:

It is true as an abstract proposition that inherent in establishing entrapment is the acknowledgement, albeit under pressure, of participation in an illegal objective. Raising entrapment as a defense for one coconspirator is thus a strategy which potentially conflicts with the assertion by others of lack of knowledge of the illegal activity. Defendants, however, have not given any indication that such conflict developed in the instant case. . . . They have given no indication of what other defense posture would have better served them in the context of a joint trial for conspiracy and of the Government's evidence that a truck which they, while armed, had been following was filled with 2,000 pounds of marijuana.

[5] We agree that Pashley's representation of all four defendants did not create an actual conflict of interest. The defenses in [2142] this case were not antagonistic, much less mutually exclusive. Ferrante and Myers did not base their defense on the proposition that no conspiracy existed; rather they argued that they had no knowledge of any conspiracy. We have found "where codefendants' statements are largely corroborative, repetitive or serve the same purpose, there is no conflict." United States v. Medel, 592 F.2d at 1310. Accord United States v. Fannon, 491 F.2d 129, 132 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1012, 95 S.Ct. 332, 42 L.Ed.2d 286 (1974). Neither Ferrante nor Myers have shown that they stood "to gain significantly" by abandoning the common defense. Foxworth, 516 F.2d at 1079. On the contrary, Lester Mers bolstered Ferrante and Myers' defense by corroborating their testimony that the latter thought they were guarding a truck full of antiques.* Further, the record suggests that the various defenses, while different, were coordinated. The testimony of the Mers could have greatly harmed Ferrante and Myers. Consistent with their own entrapment defenses, for example, the Mers could have devastated Ferrante's and Myers' defense by testifying that they had informed Ferrante and Myers that they were guarding marijuana and that the latter were fully aware of details of the transaction. By contrast, nothing in the record suggests that Ferrante and Myers could have offered damaging testimony against the Mers. DEA agents had

* Lester Mers testified as follows:

Q All right, and what did you ask him [Ferrante] to do?

A Well, I told him that I was in the middle of a transaction of an estate, of a house that had been sold in the neighborhood, and that there was some antiques and some furniture that I was responsible for to move, and I would appreciate it if he could help me out by following me with this truck to the bank where there would be a transaction of money for this deal and to give me a ride home after that.

Q Did you ever mention the word marijuana to him?

A No, I never did.

Q What did he say generally in response to your request?

A Well, he said it was sort of an inconvenience because he was going out of town, but if I couldn't get any help from anybody, then I should call him back, and I said I had already made as many calls as I could, and I couldn't find anybody.

taped several of the Mers' negotiations over the proposed marijuana transaction. Nothing to which Ferrante and Myers could have testified would have inculcated the Mers more than those taped admissions. Also, to have damaged the Mers, Ferrante and Myers would have had to inculcate themselves in the conspiracy. We find that these appellants' interests "are closely aligned such that their united front strategy might well have been the best strategy available." United States v. Medel, 592 F.2d at 1312.

No appellant has pointed to any different defense theory or new evidence or testimony that independent counsel could have elicited. Rather, appellants contend that an actual conflict resulted because the responsibility of representing all defendants diluted Pashley's credibility before the jury. We decline to hold that these appellants have shown an actual conflict merely because separate counsel might have been more impressive to a jury. All appellants' defenses were fully and forcefully presented through their own testimony. Their entire defense depended upon whether the jury believed or disbelieved this testimony. Further, cross-examination of government witnesses was probing and thorough and closing argument highlighted the strengths of the various defenses. To argue that [2143] because, stylistically or psychologically, another attorney might have been more persuasive underestimates the jury's ability to evaluate the credibility of evidence.

Ferrante and Myers' final conflict of interest argument is that Pashley's common defense denied them the opportunity to shift blame for the offense onto the Mers. They contend that independent counsel would have focused the jury's attention on the Mers by hammering home the point that the evidence against the Mers was far greater than against them. While a strategy of shifting blame to one's codefendants is a legitimate and often effective defense strategy, we conclude that in this case the independence of the defenses asserted precluded the possibility of shifting blame from one codefendant to another.³

In Foxworth the former fifth circuit held that a defendant's sixth amendment rights have been violated if the reviewing court perceives from the record a plausible alternative defense theory more favorable to the defendant than that actually pursued by counsel, but which would have prejudiced at least one codefendant by shifting to him more responsibility for the acts at issue. 516 F.2d at 1079. Although the record in Foxworth indicated that conflicting testimony at trial presented opportunities of shifting blame,⁴ the former fifth circuit pointed out that a conflict existed in selecting the initial strategy, which ³ The conflict claim asserted by appellants and its "shifting the blame" corollary are particularly troubling in conspiracy cases, where "the very nature of the charge suggests the desirability of disassociation." Fryar v. United States, 404 F.2d 1071, 1073 (10th Cir.1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 964, 89 S.Ct. 2109, 23 L.Ed.2d 175 (1969). In Glasser the Supreme Court noted the special risks of multiple representation when the charge is conspiracy: "In conspiracy cases, where the liberal rules of evidence and the wide latitude accorded the prosecution may, and sometimes do, operate unfairly against an individual defendant, it is especially important that he be given the benefit of the undivided assistance of his counsel . . ." 315 U.S. at 76, 62 S.Ct. at 467-68. See also Geer, Representation of Multiple Criminal Defendants: Conflicts of Interest and the Professional Responsibilities of the Defense Attorney, 62 Minn.L.Rev. 119, 136 (1978); Dawson, Joint Trials of Defendants in Criminal Cases: An Analysis of Efficiencies and Prejudices, 77 Mich.L.Rev. 1379, 1397-1448 (1979).

⁴ In Foxworth four prisoners were convicted of murdering a fifth. The four other prisoners in the cell testified for the prosecution; the defense's theory was that these four government witnesses had committed the murder. The government contended that the four defendants had an interest in presenting a united defense: they had a common interest in discrediting the prosecution's witnesses. Further, their own positions were compatible with the joint strategy.

precluded counsel from adopting a tactic of shifting blame to one of the codefendants. 516 F.2d at 1079-80. The court held that "if the record shows that a plausible defense (one that might have influenced twelve reasonable jurors) was foreclosed because it might have prejudiced the other defendants represented by the same appointed counsel, the conviction must be overturned. . . . An alleged conflict of interest that obstructs the use of a particular strategy or defense is not significant unless the defense is plausible." Id. at 1079, 1080. The court stressed that "the conflict occurred not in presenting the defense chosen by appointed counsel, but in selecting defenses and strategies in the first place." Id. at 1079. The record in that case "amply established such a plausible defense." Id.

The government contends that the fifth circuit in Benavidez effectively overruled the Foxworth holding that counsel's failure to "shift the blame" among codefendants [2144] could constitute an actual conflict of interest. We cannot agree. Like Foxworth, each defendant in Benavidez contended that because the evidence against his codefendant was stronger than the evidence against him, his counsel should have adopted a strategy of shifting the blame to the codefendant and emphasizing the relative weakness of the case against himself; because trial counsel represented both defendants, he was not free to adopt such a strategy. Unlike Foxworth, however, the court in Benavidez stated that the appellant could "not point to any specific argument that counsel was precluded from making or to any specific evidence that counsel was precluded from adducing on his behalf, and in reviewing the record we have discerned none." 664 F.2d at 1262 (emphasis added). Because appellants could offer no evidence or argument in support of a "plausible alternative strategy," id. at 1260, the court could not find an actual conflict of interest. Accord United States v. Huntley, 535 F.2d 1400, 1406 (5th Cir.1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 929, 97 S.Ct. 1548, 51 L.Ed.2d 773 (1977); United States ex rel. Small v. Rundle, 442 F.2d 235, 238 (3d Cir.1971).

[6] Far from overruling Foxworth, Benavidez does no more than reaffirm the requirement, strongly articulated in Foxworth itself, that an "alleged conflict of interest that obstructs the use of a particular strategy or defense is not significant unless the defense is plausible." Foxworth, 516 F.2d at 1080 (emphasis added). The synthesis of Foxworth and Benavidez is a specific application of the general principle that to warrant reversal, a conflict of interest must be actual rather than hypothetical. Failing to adopt a strategy of shifting blame may well give rise to an actual conflict of interest, but to do so the strategy must have been an option realistically available to trial counsel.

Like the defendants in Benavidez, these appellants are unable to show that a strategy of shifting the blame was really a plausible alternative for Pashley. In pronounced contrast to the situation in Foxworth, the various defenses presented by appellants at trial were the only defenses realistically available to them. Given the highly incriminating conversations tape recorded by the DEA, the Mers had little choice but to admit their indisputable actions and to focus their attack on the conduct of government agents. Likewise, Ferrante and Myers' only defense was to admit their incontrovertible actions, but to claim that they had no knowledge that the substance in the truck was marijuana. The differences in the nature of the defenses and the compatibility of the various positions asserted preclude the possibility of counsel's adopting a strategy of shifting blame among codefendants. To decide that this case presents an actual conflict would be to impose "a per se rule requiring separate representation: every time a lawyer represents more than one defendant, he is precluded from 'shifting the blame' to the client against whom the government presents the stronger case." Benavidez, 664 F.2d at 1260.

Speedy Trial Act

[7, 8] Herman and Lester Mers contend that their trial did not commence within the period required by the Speedy Trial Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 3161-68. The Act mandates that defendants be brought to trial within seventy days "from the filing date (and making public) of the information or indictment, or from the date the defendant has appeared before a judicial officer of the court in [2145] which such charge is pending, whichever date last occurs." 18 U.S.C. § 3161(c)(1). The accounting of time under the Act is subject to excludable delay attributable to the defendant as well as other particularized delays set out in section 3161(h)(1). In the present case, we assume that the seventy day period began to run on March 2, 1981, the date on which appellants were arraigned. See note 6, infra. Trial commenced on August 5, 156 days after arraignment. The government argues the exclusion of a total of ninety-seven days covering three discrete periods: forty-one days (March 13 to April 22) for motions practice before the magistrate, § 3161(h)(1)(F); twenty-six days (April 22 to May 18) during which the magistrate had the motions under advisement, § 3161(h)(1)(J); and thirty days (June 2 to July 1) during which the magistrate's report and recommendation under advisement by the district court. § 3161(h)(1)(J).³ We agree that the time was properly excludable.⁴

Appellants dispute two categories of exclusion. First, they argue that section 3161(c)(2), which provides that trial must commence "not less than thirty days from the date on which the defendant first appears through counsel," prohibits exclusion of any time occurring within that first thirty days following a defendant's first appearance in court. Appellants contend that otherwise excludable delay resulting from pretrial motions filed by defendants

⁴ Appellants contend that the seventy day time period should begin not on March 2, 1981 (date of arraignment) but rather on February 18 (date of indictment). They base this contention on the fact that they appeared for a bond hearing before a judicial officer (a magistrate) on February 6, the day of their arrest. If a defendant has appeared before a judicial officer in connection with the charge prior to the filing of the indictment, then the speedy trial clock commences on the date the indictment was filed. See 18 U.S.C. § 3161(c)(1); Judicial Guidelines at 7-8. Although it is true that "[w]hen the defendant is arrested prior to indictment and makes an initial appearance before a magistrate who orders him held to answer the charges in the district court, the seventy-day period runs from the date of his indictment," United States v. Haiges, 688 F.2d 1273, 1274 (9th Cir.1982); see also United States v. Carrasquillo, 667 F.2d 382, 384 (3d Cir.1981), we need not reach this issue. Even accepting appellants' contention that the clock should have begun on the date of indictment (February 18), that starting date adds only eleven days (February 18 to March 1) to the time that must be counted; March 2, the arraignment date, would be excluded under section 3161(h)(1) as a proceeding relating to defendant. Eleven days, added to the fifty-six net non-excludable time as we calculate it, equals sixty-seven days. Even with this earlier starting date, trial began within the requisite seventy days.

and pending within that thirty day period should not be deemed excludable. Of the total of forty-one days excluded time attributed to defense motions, eight days (March 13 to March 20) fell within the initial thirty day period covered by section 3161(c)(2). Appellants do not dispute the exclusion of other time within this forty-one day period.⁷

Appellants' position finds support in neither the language, legislative history nor policy of the provision. Section 3161(c)(2), added to the Act by Congress in 1979, by its terms speaks to the time during which trial may not commence absent waiver by a defendant of his speedy trial right. See Committee on the Administration of the Criminal Law of the Judicial Conference of the United States, Guidelines to the Administration of the Speedy Trial Act of 1974, As Amended (1979) (hereinafter cited as Judicial Guidelines) at 12-13. The section is not addressed to the computation of the overall time period during which trial must commence. Even if this language is arguably ambiguous, the legislative history is not. The legislative history leaves no doubt but that the purpose behind subsection (c)(2) was to prevent a trial from being held so quickly that a defendant would not have time to prepare. Section 3161(c)(2) was added to the statute at ⁷ On March 13, defendants filed numerous pretrial motions. Three days later, a pretrial conference disposed of some but not all of the motions. On March 26, the date for which a suppression hearing was originally scheduled, the hearing was continued, at the request of appellants, until April 8. On April 8, appellants again requested and were granted a continuance; the same thing happened on April 15. On April 22, the magistrate concluded that no suppression hearing would be needed, based on the government's representation that it would not call its informant to testify at trial. Appellants challenge the excludability of only eight days of this time: March 13 to March 20.

the behest of the Justice Department, the Judicial Conference and the American Bar Association. See Misner, The 1979 Amendments to the Speedy Trial Act: Death of the Planning Process, 32 Hastings L.J. 635, 642-43 (1981). Assistant Attorney General Phillip Heymann testified before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary that "[i]t is in recognition of the special problems often faced by defense counsel that the Department has included a provision in its bill requiring a minimum of 30 days for defense preparation. This insures the defendant some minimum preparation time even in the simplest case." * The Speedy Trial Act Amendments of 1979: Hearings Before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on S. 961 and S. 1028, 96th Cong. 1st Sess. 47, 53 (1979), (hereinafter cited as 1979 Hearings), excerpted in Federal Judicial Center, Legislative History of Title I of the Speedy Trial Act of

* Heymann specified:

Special emphasis should be made of the fact that the problems created by these strict time limits [in the 1974 act] apply at least equally to defense counsel as they do to prosecutors. In fact more often in these more complex cases, defense counsel needs are greater than ours because we have at a minimum prepared the case for presentation to the grand jury. In many of the more complex cases, especially in the white-collar crime area, we have spent considerably more time investigating the case. Sometimes the pre-indictment investigation can take years during which time the prosecutor has accumulated masses of documents on which he has spent a great deal of time and energy in review.

Equally serious problems arise for defense counsel in trying to rapidly become familiar with very esoteric federal laws or specific standard business practices and operating procedures. Often there is a need to become expert in the details of the particular regulations of a federal agency.

Defense counsel also has the particular problems, raised most often in multi-defendant cases, of potential conflicts in representation and difficulties in coordinating among the lawyers on the defense team. Each of these special problems is supported by the OIAJ study.

See also United States v. Wooten, 688 F.2d 941, 951 (4th Cir.1982) ("what section 3161(c)(2) does is simply to guarantee to the criminal defendant the right to a delay of at least thirty days between arraignment and trial in any circumstances"). The Senate Report explicitly stated that purpose would be in no way furthered by holding that time that is otherwise excludable under the Act should not be excluded if it occurs within the first thirty days elapsing from the defendant's initial appearance:

Prohibiting trial less than 30 days after the date the defendant appears in a position to begin preparing his defense more fully protects basic due process rights. It is the Committee's intent that the exclusions provided in section 3161(h) apply to the 30-day minimum to-trial provision. Therefore, if an event occurs which would automatically exclude time under subsection (h), such as a pretrial mental examination, that time is not only excluded from computing the time within which trial must occur prior to imposition of the dismissal sanctions, but time would also automatically be excluded in computing the 30-day minimum period of time, during which the judge could not schedule trial without the defendant's consent.

1979 Senate Report at 32, excerpted in Legislative History at 73-74 (emphasis added).

Appellants can cite only two authorities for their contention that no excludable delay is permitted during the first thirty day interval. The Judicial Guidelines at 12-14 provide that:

In spite of language to the contrary . . . , it is the view of this Committee that the thirty-day minimum period for commencement of trial is not extended by the exclusions of Section 3161(h). . . . Moreover, if the thirty-day minimum were interpreted as subject to the exclusions, the provision would become a powerful weapon for defendants who wanted to delay their prosecutions, a result that is wholly at odds with the major purpose of the statute. Under such an interpretation, the court could be compelled to defer a trial simply because the defendant filed a motion or because the court took a pretrial matter under advisement—both events that trigger periods of excludable time under Section 3161(h)(1).

The fourth circuit, in United States v. Wooten, embraced the Guideline's passage quoted above and held that section 3161(c)(2) "does not provide for an extension of the 30-day minimum time period between the defendant's appearance with counsel and trial either expressly or by incorporation by reference of Section 3161(h)." 688 F.2d at 949-50. The Wooten court found that the exclusions of section 3161(h) do not "apply" to the time limits of section 3161(c)(2): "There is no language in section 3161(h), which suggests even remotely that its exclusion provisions have any reference to or connection with the time limits fixed by section 3161(c)(2)." Id. at 950.

While appellants' reading of the Judicial Guidelines and of Wooten appears superficially attractive, we believe that they have misperceived the import of those sources. The thirty days of section 3161(c)(2) were intended to be measured as calendar days. The concern articulated by the Judicial Guidelines was that a defendant should not be able to lengthen his thirty day minimum period by the filing of motions that would constitute excludable time. The message of the quoted passage is that a clever defendant who wished to postpone indefinitely his trial should not be allowed to argue that certain pretrial motions filed within the first thirty day period tolled the running of the thirty day minimum period. Similarly, the Wooten court stated that "what the statute does not give the criminal defendant is the right, by filing dilatory motions, to extend on his own the date of his trial." 688 F.2d at 951. Thus, "what section 3161(c)(2) does is simply to guarantee to the criminal defendant the right to a delay of at least 30 days between arraignment and trial in any circumstances." Id. We conclude that section 3161(c)(2) merely defines the time during which trial may not commence and that that time is measured as thirty calendar days from the event triggering the speedy trial clock. We join other circuits that exclude time during the initial thirty day period. See United States v. Stuart, 689 F.2d 759, 762 & n. 2 (8th Cir. 1982) ⁹ United States v. Jodoin, 672 F.2d 232 at 236-38 (1st Cir.1982);¹⁰ *United States v. ⁹ An information against Stuart was filed on June 22, 1981. 689 F.2d at 761. The court found that in "counting days elapsed before trial, we exclude the 16-day period from July 14, 1981, to July 30, 1981. The record on appeal shows that the continuance granted during this time was to allow defendant to obtain counsel." Id. at 762 n. 2 (citation omitted).

¹⁰ Jodoin was arraigned on August 25, 1980. 672 F.2d at 236. The first circuit excluded two periods falling within the first thirty days after arraignment. The court excluded ten days (August 25 to September 5) between the time when defense counsel made an oral motion for time to file a suppression motion and the time when the motion was actually filed. The court also excluded twenty-six days (from September 5 to September 30) when the motion to suppress was pending before the district court prior to hearing. Id. at 237.

¹² Defendant was arraigned on August 15, 1980. 669 F.2d at 1171. On August 27, the defense initiated the motions practice exclusion by filing five pretrial discovery requests. Id. The court of appeals affirmed the district court's exclusion of eight-one days between August 27, when the motions were filed, and November 17, when the order denying the motions was issued. Id. at 1172.

ments challenges the exclusion of certain time attributed to the magistrate's and the district court's disposition of pretrial motions. Appellants filed motions to suppress evidence on March 13, 1981, and [2149] the magistrate promptly set a hearing date. The date was postponed until April 22, because appellants obtained three continuances. See note 7 supra. The hearing did not occur on April 22, however, because the government informed the magistrate that it would not seek to introduce certain evidence. Because this decision by the government obviated the need for a suppression hearing, the magistrate orally informed the parties that he deemed all of the motions except one moot. On May 18, the magistrate issued his report and recommendation, in which he recommended that the district court dismiss as moot all motions save one. The magistrate deferred one of Herman Mers' motions to the district court judge for her consideration and gave the parties ten days to object before submitting his report to the court, as required by the Federal Magistrate's Act, 28 U.S.C. § 636(h)(1). No party objected and the report was submitted on June 2. The court adopted the magistrate's report on August 3. The forty-one days for motions practice (March 13 to April 22) were properly excluded under section 3161(h)(1)(F); this is not challenged. Although appellants raise creative arguments to the contrary, we hold that the twenty-six days during which the magistrate had the motions under advisement (April 22 to May 18) and the thirty days during which the district court had the motions under advisement (June 2 to July 1) were excludable under section 3161(h)(1)(J).

Section 3161(h)(1)(J) provides for the exclusion of "delay reasonably attributable to any period, not to exceed thirty days, during which any proceeding concerning the defendant is actually under advisement by the court.”¹⁴ Appellants dispute the exclusions on two grounds. First, they argue that section 3161(h)(1)(J) permits only a total of thirty days under advisement period for both the magistrate and the district court. This is an issue of first impression. Although in United States v. Delongchamps, 679 F.2d 217, 219-20 (11th Cir. 1982) we observed that section 3161(h)(1)(J) permits the magistrate a maximum of thirty days during which to take motions under advisement, see also United States v. Raineri, 670 F.2d at 707 (holding that section 3161(h)(1)(J) allows thirty day exclusion for magistrate having motions under advisement), this does not resolve the issue of whether the district court then may take an additional excludable thirty day under advisement period of its own for consideration of the same motion.

[9] The magistrate spent a total of sixty-seven days dealing with the motions. Forty-one of those days (March 13 through April 22) were excludable as motions practice under section 3161(h)(1)(F). Appellants correctly argue that the excludable time under section 3161 (h)(1)(F) ended on April 22, when the magistrate learned that a suppression hearing would not be necessary and when he orally advised the parties of the recommendations that he intended to make in his report and recommendation. The Judicial Guidelines at 33 recommend that the “exclusion for delay resulting from pretrial motions be treated as ending at such time as the court has received everything it expects from the parties before reaching a decision—that is, such date as all anticipated briefs have been filed and any necessary hearing has been completed. [2150] Thereafter, the matter should be treated as 'under advisement' and subject to the rules of subparagraph (J).'' Section 3161(h)(1)(F) and section 3161(h)(1)(J) dovetail; the former ends when the latter begins. Thus the Judicial Guidelines at 42 recommend that the "under advisement period" of section 3161(h)(1)(J) begins on "the day following the date on which the court has received everything it expects from the parties, examining physicians, etc., before reaching a decision. It is normally the date following the expiration of an exclusion under subparagraph (A), (B), (F), or (G).'' Once all parties' materials are in and any needed hearings are held (or it is determined that none are needed), the matter should be treated as "under advisement" and subject to section 3161(h)(1)(J) rather than section 3161(h)(1)(F).

¹⁴ The section has as its predecessor section 3161(h)(1)(G) of the original 1974 Speedy Trial Act. The provision was “added by the Senate Judiciary Committee so that such exclusions would not have to be made under the ‘ends of justice’ continuance provision; the 30-day limitation was later added by the House.” Frase, at 693 (1976).

The under advisement period was triggered on April 22, when the magistrate first learned from the parties that no suppression hearing would be required. As of that date, the magistrate had before him all of the materials he expected to receive from the parties. With April 22 as the starting date, the issue becomes whether the magistrate issued his report and recommendation within the thirty days permitted and whether the district court then is entitled to an additional thirty days during which to have the motions under advisement.

The magistrate submitted his report and recommendation on May 18. Appellants contend that he thus expended twenty-six days (from April 22 to May 18) of the thirty day total under advisement exclusion, thus leaving the district court a total of four days in which to dispose of the motions. We reject their argument that the thirty day under advisement exclusion is a total for both the magistrate and the district court. The Judicial Guidelines flatly state that "when a pretrial matter is considered by both a magistrate and a judge pursuant to [the Magistrates Act], the Committee believes that the [Speedy Trial Act] permits two thirty day periods for consideration of the same matter" (emphasis added). We agree with the Guidelines.

The third circuit adopted a similar approach in United States v. Molt, 631 F.2d 258 (3d Cir.1980). In Molt, the defendant was tried before several judges on different indictments, two judges made decisions on pretrial motions, decisions which the government and the defense agreed were binding as to all of the indictments. One judge handled a suppression motion, while the second judge handled Molt's challenge to the constitutionality of the statute under which he was charged. On appeal, Molt argued that the Speedy Trial Act allowed only a total of thirty days "under advisement" for both judges and both motions. In rejecting this contention, the third circuit stated:

Such a narrow construction is not required by the language of the Act, nor is it consistent with the Act's intent. It is unlikely that a complex case like this, with motions affecting the disposition of multiple indictments being heard separately by different judges, was envisioned by the drafters. Although the Act is meant to speed prosecutions, it is not intended to ensnare trial judges. To allow only one exclusion would have that effect, for if only [one judge's] advisement period is excluded, then no time is allowed [the other judge]. First, this forces judges to race to decisions. Second, because one judge may not be aware of the action of the other, neither may even know that the time for consid-[2151]eration of the motion has been preempted by the other judge. A single judge hearing two motions is aware of the limits and can plan accordingly. Where two or more judges are hearing separate motions affecting a single case, each should have the same opportunity to bring his schedule into conformity with the Speedy Trial Act.

Id. at 261-62 (emphasis in original).

As a practical matter, allowing only a thirty day period within which both magistrate and judge can consider a motion might well unfairly limit full consideration of important and complex pretrial motions. The magistrate must review all transcripts of evidentiary hearings as well as counsel's briefs before determining the outcome of a motion. He must then articulate, in writing, findings of fact and conclusions of law. After the magistrate files his report, the parties have ten days within which to file objections. 28 U.S.C. § 636(h)(1).¹⁵ The district court then must conduct an independent review and dispose of the motion. We decline to adopt a mechanical rule that all of this must be accomplished within thirty days. Such a rule is not required by the Speedy Trial Act. Rather, we agree with the Judicial Guidelines that the magistrate and the district court have thirty days each during which to take pretrial motions under advisement. Here, the magistrate conducted the suppression hearing on April 22 and issued his report and recommendation on May 18. That span of twenty-six days during which he had the motions under advisement was less than the thirty to which he was entitled.¹⁶

¹⁵ We need not decide whether this ten days may properly be excluded under other sections of the Speedy Trial Act.

the designation of magistrates to hear pretrial matters should not become a justification for prolonging the pretrial stage. Mag-

[10] Appellants' second ground for arguing that the district court was not entitled to a thirty day under advisement period is that, because they had not objected to the magistrate's report and recommendation, there was nothing for the district court to take under advisement. They base this argument in part on a local rule of court which provides that absent objection, a magistrate's report and recommendation becomes the order of the court. The magistrate's report, however, cannot automatically become the order of the court merely because none of the parties object.¹⁷ The appellants' argument misunderstands the [2152] role of the magistrate under the Federal Magistrates Act. Magistrates are not Article III judges; their jurisdiction is derived from the Magistrate's Act. That Act provides that a federal judge may reject, in whole or in part, the findings of the magistrate. 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1). The statute does not limit the court's power to reject istrates should normally be expected to render their determinations, proposed findings, and recommendations sufficiently promptly so that the judge has adequate time to consider the matter without causing the total time a matter is "under advisement" to exceed thirty days. A district judge referring a matter to a magistrate should continue to maintain control over the case during the period of consideration by the magistrate, so that the purposes of the act will be accomplished.

Judicial Guidelines at 42.

¹⁷ The record suggests, however, that the operation of the local rule is far from automatic:

MR. PASHLEY: I would point out that that particular report which was an order and a report became the order of the Court because there were no objections filed thereto. In other words, if a [report and recommendation] from the magistrate is, in fact, sent on to the Court and there are no objections thereto, the local rule is it becomes the order of the Court within 10 days.

THE COURT: Not necessarily. I suppose more often than not I do adopt the magistrate's report, but I have on occasion not adopted one even when there has been no objection to it.

only those reports to which objections are made, and no local rule may alter a district court's scope of jurisdiction.

Regardless of the likelihood that a court will accept or reject a particular magistrate's report, the court's power to do so cannot be questioned. In the present case, the district judge had to rule on the motions. For example, the court might well have remanded to the magistrate with instructions to determine whether a fourth amendment violation (alleged by appellants) may have indirectly resulted in tainted evidence that ought not be admitted into evidence. Further, one pretrial motion was not moot: the magistrate deferred this motion to the district judge for consideration. The court could have required a hearing on that motion.

The district judge, in her order denying appellants' motion to dismiss for failure to comply with the Speedy Trial Act, stated unmistakably that "during this period of time [between submission of the magistrate's report and recommendation and the court's adoption of the report] the Magistrate's Report was under advisement. Thirty days of this period is excluded in computing the time within which the trial must commence. See 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(1)(J)." The legitimacy of the thirty day exclusion is in no way negated by the fact that the court did eventually adopt the recommendations of the magistrate. The district judge had several motions to review and resolve, and we decline to inquire whether that process should have taken her the full thirty days. See Frase, supra, at 694 ("Of course, the judge himself will determine whether the period of delay meets this definition and there is nothing to prevent judges from routinely taking all motions 'under advisement' for the maximum of 30 days").

[11, 12] Appellants stress the statutory language of section 3161(h)(1)(J) that the court must have the pretrial motions "actually under advisement" before the time is deemed excludable. From this language they argue that unless the district judge can demonstrate that she was actually reviewing a particular matter and can show the precise amount of time she spent on this review, then the time is not excludable; to be excludable under section 3161(h)(1)(J), the time must be reasonably attributable to the decisionmaking process. Such an approach would require appellate courts to evaluate the relative merit of pretrial motions to determine how much "advisement" was appropriate by the district court. Appellants apparently would require the district court to keep a daily log to keep account of the amount of time spent on each pretrial motion. We cannot read this much into the words "actually under advisement." While the section does require that the under advisement period be reasonable, we leave determination of the reasonableness issue to the sound discretion of the trial judge.

The section cannot mean that the district judge must demonstrate that she was actually considering the matter on every excludable day. Rather, the provision envisions excludable time as being that time, prior to disposition, during which the court has the matter under advisement or thirty days, whichever is less. Thus, if a court renders [2153] its decision on the tenth day after its submission, then the matter is deemed under "actual advisement" for ten days and that the court can only exclude ten days, not thirty days. The thirty day under advisement exclusion, like the other exclusions in section 3161, is automatic. United States v. Stafford, 697 F.2d 1368, at pp. 1371-72 (11th Cir.1983). The Senate Judiciary Committee's Report recommended that the 1979 amendments "leave intact" the "automatic application of exclusions as provided in existing law." Specifically, the Report noted that section 3161(h)(1) "currently provides that periods of delay consumed by the following are to be automatically excluded: . . . Periods when [hearings on pretrial motions] are under advisement by the court." 1979 Senate Report at 33, excerpted in Legislative History at 113-114. Accord Stafford, at 1371-72 (Concluding that the language of Section 3161(h) "clearly indicates" that each excludable period listed in the section "automatically is a period of delay" and "holding that Section 3161(h) creates automatic exclusion . . ."); United States v. Fogarty, 692 F.2d 542, 545 (8th Cir.1982) ("[s]ection 3161(h)(1) (F) clearly requires automatic exclusion of the sixty-one days during which such pretrial motions were continuously pending"); United States v. Brim, 630 F.2d at 1312-1313 (adopting the district court's conclusion that "the Act intended automatic exclusion"). But see S.Rep. No. 1021, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 36 (1974) excerpted in Legislative History at 104.¹⁸ For the Act to work, the parties

¹⁸ It was not the intent of the Committee in adopting this amendment to give a blanket exception to matters under advisement for the time excluded must be "reasonably attributable" and the matter must be "actually under advisement." Therefore the judge must be actually considering the question, for example, conducting the research on a novel legal question.

S.Rep. No. 1021, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 36 (1974) excerpted in Legislative History at 104. Similarly, in 1979, the Senate Judiciary Committee noted:

Although some witnesses contended that all time consumed by motions practice, from preparation through their disposition, should be excluded, the Committee finds that approach unreasonable. This is primarily because, in routine cases, preparation time should not be excluded where the questions of law are not novel and the issues of fact simple. However, the Committee would permit through its amendments to subsection (h)(8)(B) must know, as each day passes, whether or not that day is excludable. We must "insure the ability of the courts to administer the Act." United States v. Bufalino, 683 F.2d 639, 646 (2d Cir.1982), petition for cert. filed, ____ U.S. ____, 103 S.Ct. 727, 74 L.Ed.2d ____ (1982). To hold that an appellate court must examine retroactively the amount of "advisement" needed for a given pretrial motion would inject a dangerous element of uncertainty into the statutory scheme. Accord Stafford, at 1371.

According to our calculations, appellants were brought to trial within the seventy days net time allowed by the Speedy Trial Act. Trial began 156 days after arraignment. Ninety-seven days were properly excluded: forty-one days for pretrial motions practice (including eight days falling within the initial thirty day period following arraignment), twenty-six days during which the magistrate had the motions under advisement and thirty days during which the [2154] district court had the motions under advisement.

Other Arguments on Appeal

[13] Appellants raise several issues which need not detain us long. First, we find that the district court did not violate either Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2)(E) or United States v. James, 590 F.2d 575 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 917, 99 S.Ct. 2836, 61 L.Ed.2d 283 (1979), reasonable preparation time for pretrial motions in cases presenting novel questions of law or complex facts. We suggest caution by courts in granting "ends of justice" continuances pursuant to this section, primarily because it will be quite difficult to determine a point at which preparation actually begins.

1979 Senate Report at 33-34, excerpted in Legislative History, at 114.

in admitting into evidence certain statements made by coconspirator Lester Mers. The government met the James requirement that such statements are admissible only if there is "substantial independent evidence" of a conspiracy. Id. at 581 (emphasis omitted). Our earlier recitation of the facts shows that Ferrante and Myers were acting in concert with Lester Mers. Ferrante and Myers, who were both armed at the time, monitored the transfer of the marijuana-laden trucks from Lester Mers to the undercover DEA agents; they began following the truck until Lester Mers ordered them to follow him instead; they then complied with Mers' directive and followed him to the restaurant where Herman Mers was waiting. Similarly, this evidence, combined with other testimony by DEA agents, was sufficient to support Ferrante's and Myers' convictions for conspiracy and aiding and abetting.

[14] Secondly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying Lester Mers a jury instruction on the entrapment defense. A defendant cannot avail himself of an entrapment defense unless the initiator of his criminal activity is acting as an agent of the government. United States v. Noll, 600 F.2d 1123, 1129 (5th Cir.1979); United States v. Garcia, 546 F.2d 613, 615 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 958, 97 S.Ct. 1608, 51 L.Ed.2d 810 (1977). Lester Mers never dealt with or even met Fiori, the government's informant. Any inducements to Lester Mers to traffic in drugs came from Herman Mers, a private citizen. While Lester Mers' vicarious entrapment theory is ingenious, it is not the law.

[15] Thirdly, Lester Mers argues that when the government arranges to provide the drugs to a subject and also arranges for another government agent to purchase the drugs, then the government has achieved a "full circle" transaction that violates a defendant's due process rights. The facts of this case, however, do not suggest a full-circle transaction. The defendants stipulated at trial that no DEA agent supplied marijuana to Fiori or to the Mers. There also was no evidence that Fiori supplied the marijuana.

[16] Fourthly, Herman and Lester Mers argue that their due process rights under Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215 (1963) were violated by the government's refusal to disclose Fiori's arrest record and withholding of material relating to the existence of any remunerative agreement between Fiori and the government. Defendants offered no theory of how such material could have been relevant, admissible evidence. Because Fiori was not called as a witness, appellants' arguments based on Federal Rules of Evidence 608, 609 and 404(b) are inapposite.
